

HEALING

Interactions between biomic structures are illustrated: Great Lakes, New England, and Maritime Biomes are shown as red circles. Ley lines (green dash) carry the current of unresolved memories generate within biomes by European, Native Ley and terrestrial forces. These memories could be of war, loss, broken treaties, plague, or holocaust embedded as memory in the DNA of humans. Unresolved memories are played out at Biomic edge points, crossed by leys. One such point is an ALS cluster in Thomaston, ME. The two primary City and Aboriginal Leys are mirrored by 'Healing Leys', indicating a pathway for healing of karma (unresolved memories). Healing Leys act as a release point or 'flush' of biome associated memories. Phi ratios are seen (in other PDF documents) throughout these mechanisms and is a vehicle or carrier wave that resonates to the phi in human DNA and physiology.

Interpretation of these dynamics would suggest that the Aboriginal mind and way of life offers connection to release of cycles of suffering, redemption, domination, war and holocaust. Phi, a proportion of life seen in human scale and cycles of time, was once integrated in cultural expression creating connection with vital terrestrial forces. Cultures with the longest run have the phi proportion integrated into every aspect of society. Repair is indicated through reintroduction of the Phi ratio into social structure, holiday cycles, and human design – all common to Native lifeways.

Specifically Mt. Pisgah is at the crossing of two healing lines. The Northeast Kingdom of Vermont is generally pointed to as the place to reintroduce the phi ratio into the central Biome of North America and begin to release karmic memories affecting health.
